Disappearing Journals?

Those empty slots on the Library's journal display shelves don't mean that our journals are disappearing...

The Library continues to move its journal subscriptions to online-only access. The display shelf for each journal that moves to online-only is labeled with the journal's status, and that status label will remain in place for 12 months or more. You may even find the hard copy of the issue you are looking for on the flat shelf underneath each display shelf, as publishers are still sending some residual hard copy issues for the time being.

The Library will continue to receive hard copy of core journals such as Lancet, New England Journal of Medicine, Annals of Internal Medicine, and the American Thoracic Society's journals. Any new journal subscription will be started in electronic-only format unless there is an over-riding practical or economic reason to do otherwise.

You can connect to the Library's electronic journals in a number of ways, including the following:

1. The blue UTHCT Full Text links that display with PubMed abstracts.
2. The Library's Serials Solutions® system, which is linked from journal records in the Library's WebVoyage online catalog, from any Library web page (E-Journals & Publications) and from Ovid MEDLINE.

The Library currently has excess to several thousand electronic journals in various fields, so don't assume that we don't have access to a particular journal just because the Health Science Center's services and programs don't cover that field. And of course the Library can obtain virtually any article that we don't have in hard copy or on the web. So while the Library's hard copy journals may be shrinking, you have thousands of journals at your fingertips.
