New PubMed Interface

PubMed now has a new interface with a new look.

Advanced search (linked above the search box on the new PubMed home page) allows user to apply search limits such as years, languages, age groups, and article types.

A fact sheet on the new PubMed is available on the Library's web site (<http://library.uthct.edu/newpubmed.pdf>). The Library provides PubMed assistance upon request, and training for individuals or small groups is available by appointment.

Why Use the Online Catalog?

The Library's WebVoyage online catalog is the key to all of the Library's information resources whether in print, on the web, on DVD, or in any other format.

The online catalog includes web links to any resource that is available online. It shows when a publication is on microfilm, in a special collections cabinet, or in storage. It provides web links to journals that publishers have not submitted to PubMed or which are too old to be linked from PubMed.

The online catalog becomes more important as electronic books and journals proliferate and as the Library continues to retain older printed and microfilmed volumes of journals that have newer volumes available online. It provides a comprehensive picture of the entirety of the Library's holdings as no other single database or system does.

The WebVoyage online catalog is linked as "Library Catalog" from the right side of the Library's web pages.
